The idea

Sellers pick an agent on fees and brochures. We wanted to match them on what they need and the personality they want, so the sale feels right.

> Write down who your tool is for and what a good result looks like, in two sentences.

The usual route

In our estimate, a first version built the traditional way would have cost tens of thousands of pounds and taken several months. That is our judgement, not a published figure.

START WITH

Ask yourself what your idea would cost if you only built the smallest working slice.

Piece 1: the matching tool

A seller answers questions about their sale and the personality they want in an agent. The tool matches them to the agent who fits best.

> Start with the one feature people would use on day one.

Piece 2: a CRM for agents

Every lead is tracked in one back end, so agents see where each enquiry came from and what happens next.

Give every lead one home. Retire the spreadsheets and inbox folders.

Piece 3: a brand kit

Colours, type and tone settled once, so marketing material and social posts come out consistent and good-looking every time.

Pick two colours, two fonts and a tone of voice. Write them down.

The tools and the cost

Claude, Postgres, Vercel, Apify and Firecrawl. About £500 in tools to build and about £90 a month to run. Tool costs only, not a fee and not our time.

START WITH

List the tools your idea would need. Price them per month, not per project.

The early signal

Strong feedback from the agents involved, and several leads so far, most of which went on to instruct. A small sample, so we draw no big conclusions.

Our own venture, built for ourselves and a partner. Your costs and results will differ.
