HOW-TO

Teach Claude your business once. Skip the re-explaining.

Set up one Claude Project in about 15 minutes, step by step.

1. Create the project

Open Claude, choose Projects in the left-hand menu, then create a new project. Name it after one job, such as Customer emails.

>
> One project per job, not one for the whole business.

2. Let Claude write the briefing

In a normal chat, paste: I want to set up a Claude Project for answering customer emails. Ask me up to eight questions, one at a time, then write a briefing of no more than 300 words.

Answer the questions, then copy the briefing.

3. Paste it into the instructions

Inside the project, find the option to set project instructions and paste the briefing in. Every chat in the project will follow it.

START WITH

Keep it short. 200 to 300 words is plenty.

4. Add two or three files

Upload your price list, your FAQ and a few real replies you were pleased with. Files are available to every chat in the project.

>
> Remove customer names and addresses first.

5. Test it

Open a new chat in the project and ask: A customer wants a quote by Friday and we are booked until Monday. Write a reply.

>
> If it misses, fix the instructions, not the chat.

What it could give back

Five minutes a day re-explaining is 25 minutes a week. Over 48 weeks that is 20 hours. Illustrative, so time your own week.

START WITH

Start with the job that eats the most time.

One thing to watch

Plan limits change and Anthropic's pages do not all agree. Check what your own account offers before you rely on a feature.

START WITH

Free accounts are listed as up to five projects.

One job.
One project.
Done once.
