COPY AND PASTE

Claude prompts for the admin eating your week.

Five prompts, ready to paste.

Don’t miss slide 6: the secret ingredient

SWIPE ››

01 / 08

1. Chase a quote

Paste: Write a friendly two-line follow-up to [customer] about the [job] quote I sent on [date]. Keep it warm, no pressure, and ask if they have any questions.

START WITH

Add the price if you want it in the email.

2. Answer an enquiry

Paste: Here is an enquiry: [paste it].
Write a reply that thanks them, answers the questions and suggests a call on [two days]. Under 100 words, plain English.

START WITH

Reply while you are the first to answer.

3. Reply to a review

Paste: Here is a review: [paste it]. Write a short, polite reply in my voice. If it is negative, own the issue and offer to put it right by phone.

START WITH

Use the same prompt for good and bad reviews.

4. Describe what you sell

Paste: Write a 50-word description of [service or product] for my website. Customers are [who]. Mention [one thing we do better]. No jargon.

START WITH

Ask for three versions and pick your favourite.

5. Turn notes into a to-do list

Paste: Here are my rough notes from today: [paste them]. Turn them into a to-do list, most urgent first, with who needs to do what.

START WITH

Voice-to-text notes work fine.

06 / 08

The secret ingredient

After every prompt, add this line:

> If there is anything you are unsure of, ask me follow-up questions before you start.

WHY IT WORKS

Claude asks for what it is missing instead of guessing. Answer, then read the draft.

What it could give back

UK owners say they spend about 11 hours a week on admin (Amex survey). Save 10 minutes on each of these five jobs weekly and that is about 40 hours over 48 weeks. Illustrative, so time your own.

START WITH

Start with the job you keep putting off.

One thing to watch

Read every draft before it goes out, and check names, dates and prices. Leave out passwords and card numbers.

START WITH

Claude drafts, you decide.

Pick one.
Paste it today.
Keep what works.

Want help setting up AI for your business? We offer a free 30 minute AI audit. Details in the first comment.

Which of these five jobs do you keep putting off?